“Interested in Volunteering... Did you know that one in four people experience mental health difficulties? The ‘Head Out Project’ is a new, innovative project that supports people with mental health difficulties to become more involved in their local community. With the support of Volunteer partners, they are empowered to re-establish and expand personal interests, thus alleviating social isolation and loneliness. Participants are matched to a Volunteer partner and together they engage in a social activity once every 2 weeks. This is a social outing of interest to both, and may include: going to the cinema, going for a walk, having a cup of coffee, a library visit, checking out local social activities, playing a sport. Volunteers receive full training, on-going support and out of pocket expenses for their participation.
